About LILAR Paris

LILAR Paris has been redefining the world of weddings since its founding in 2017. This couture house embodies the artistry of French craftsmanship, offering creations that exude timeless elegance. At the helm is founder and designer Sandrine Rocher Derichebourg, whose refined taste for Parisian haute couture shines through her chic, minimalist bridal gowns and tailored suits.

Among its collections, the Allegories line stands out, inspired by the poetic notion that “dresses are symbols, and women bring them to life.” Each piece reflects a blend of tradition and modernity, elevating bridal wear into an art form.

Behind The Brand

What was the spark for beginning your brand?

Around the age of 40, I realized I was brimming with a desire for creativity and fashion. I chose wedding dresses because I wanted to work with beautiful, luxurious materials. I've always been in love with haute couture, and wedding dresses are the closest expression of this art form.

What inspires you creatively?

The great French fashion designers of the 20th century and the golden age of cinema.

A favorite quote or piece of advice that inspires your creative work?

My mantra: L'Amour, la Mode, la Modernité (Love, Fashion, Modernity).

What advice can you give to brides when shopping for their dress?

Stay true to yourself, but dream a little and smile a lot. Think about how your dress will photograph, and avoid heavy makeup or excessive jewelry, which can often add years to your look.

What are you drawn to in bridal right now? And what would you love to see less of?

When I started, I was very 'anti-bride,' but now I find myself embracing the idea of the 'maxi-bride.' So many brides follow me, and I couldn't be happier! What I'd love to see less of are dresses where bits of lace are added here and there just to create a 'wedding' look – but, of course, there's something for everyone.
